

I hand out Safari maps to all of my students, tell them which spot is very worth to checkout out. Then, I says"five hours later, we will meet up in the front door. Go explore nature by yourself!"

All the students feel that are arrival Treasure Island and they may find some interested things during the way. Some of students gather together and make a plan to explore the park.

Five hours after, all the students are come back safely.

THE END.

Looks like teaching is not a good idea for me. Maybe I should do something else.

I go to few high school later on, but all the schools let me leave because none of students like the way I teach. I feels very frustrate and lost. Now I am become a jobless.

I take my students to Safari Park to get more understanding about how natural affect each animals's behavior and living habit.

I gives students two options to discover the park:

I take students to visit one by one

Give a park map and let student discover themselves
